ALEXR. HORTON,
Manager, Whampoa.

1f Hongkong, 4th September, 1863.

NOTICE.

THE Undersigned call the attention of Masters and Agents of vessels discharging at this port to the great advantage to be gained in point of convenience, despatch, and economy, by making use of their Wharves at New Harbour.

With the assistance of steam cranes, a general cargo can be hauled easily in a few days—or in about one-fifth of the time usually occupied discharging in the reeds.

There are large, dry, and very commodious brick godowns on the wharves, which vessels have free use of for cargo while discharging.

The trouble and disputes with, and pilfering of cargo common among boatmen, are avoided by vessels using the wharves.

Cartage of cargo to the town (which is within easy distance) is guaranteed to be not more than lighterage from the reefs, and the cost of two discharging alongside is less.

There is always a large stock of the best English and Welsh coals on the premises, which are supplied to steamers at the lowest market price, and vessels going alongside to take in or discharge coals pay no wharfage.

Vessels discharging cargo pay a wharfage of 20 cents per ton—a trifling charge when the immense advantages gained are taken into consideration.

Arrangements have been made by which all repairs to ships or steamers can be done with despatch while the vessels are lying alongside the wharves.

There is an efficient European pilot on the premises, and, when required, a steaming tug is always available.

The Daily Press

HONGKONG, JUNE 18TH, 1868.

A QUIET notification in the Government Gazette foreshadows a project, the execution of which would be of no small importance to Hongkong. Considering the trade and enterprise of the place, it is not a little surprising that it should have been contented so long to go without better facilities for unloading vessels than those which exist here. That the cargo-boats are numerous and well handled is certainly true, and the magnitude of the coolie population renders the waste of labour incurred in discharging ships by means of lighters less serious an item in the cost of the process, than it might be elsewhere. Still it remains a process which is either slow or expensive. As a general rule, shipowners and consignees seem to prefer to choose the slow alternative. If a clipper is late for the tea season, of course an extra effort is made, and she is cleared out in a surprisingly short space of time; but a large ship, with a general cargo from London, for instance, not in any particular hurry to get elsewhere, takes her time, as a rule, in a manner which people who have goods on board, "down in the soulless recesses of the ——" hold, often find very aggravating. If the voyage from England were shorter, the delay in discharging ships with lighters, would be less readily borne; but it seems a drop in the ocean of time consumed in a voyage round the world, which shipowners do not realise sufficiently to economise. The shorter the voyage the more necessary does it become that the facilities for loading and unloading should be good. What would the Canton steamers be without their wharves?

It now seems that the want of wharves for the general commerce of the port, which has often been discussed, is beginning to suggest definite action in the matter, and a project for the construction of a pier or wharf on a large scale has been submitted to the Government by private firms, who are thinking of undertaking the work, if permission should be obtained. The project, if it has been a long while coming, has come out at last on a rather large scale. It is proposed to construct a Tsaipoh wharf, which shall run out five hundred feet into the harbour, making it possible not only for a ship to lie alongside the head, but for two others to be simultaneously along both sides of the pier. There can hardly be two opinions about the utility of such a wharf if it were built, but there may easily be considerable doubt concerning the extent of the incidental inconveniences to which it might give rise. If it were five hundred feet long the pier would stand out into fifty feet of water—out, that is to say, into a part of the harbour through which steamers at present continually passing. Would it, great evil, as the steamers could pass further out. In fact, there can hardly be any public inconvenience attached to the construction of such a wharf as that proposed, but private interests have to be considered as well as those of the public, and no one can be allowed to inconvenience his neighbours for his own exclusive advantage, even when his own advantage makes him desirous of undertaking a work which the public at large would gladly see carried out. If the owners of property in the neighbourhood of the proposed wharf think their interests are likely to be compromised, it is now their time to speak, and if they can show that the projected work would really inconvenience them, it will be for the projectors to consider if it is worth while to try and overcome their objections.

It it should come to pass that the proposed wharf should be constructed, it is obvious that many more ships will discharge their cargoes there than those belonging or consigned to the owners of property in the immediate neighbourhood. A change, therefore, would come over the mode in which goods are distributed through the various godowns of the town. At present the cargo-boat takes it from the ship's side, and the piers afford them all on shore at one spot. It will become desirable, therefore, to improve the means of transporting goods east and west along the Praya, and this might easily be done by laying down a tramway, like those used for the American street railways, which were laid down a year or two ago in some London streets, and, either foolishly, by the way, torn up again afterwards. Such tramways merely consist of flat strips of iron with a very low flange, and trucks with ordinary wheels, if of the proper gauge, can run on them. Moreover, any vehicle making use of them can easily be guided off them and on again, so that they would be peculiarly well adapted to the work they would have to do on the Hongkong Praya. If the Praya were not interrupted, so inconveniently for the commercial development of the town, by the impassable district belonging to the Military Authorities, it would be possible to have a tramway extending from East Point to the Gas works, along which goods could travel with the utmost possible facility. Thus a discharging wharf would be a great public work, which ought to be undertaken at the common cost for the good of all. It might instead of having a T head, have a great circular head, around the circumference of which half a dozen vessels could lie at once. Unless the water-side communications of the town were greatly improved, in a manner which is hardly possible while the naval yard remains where it is, such a public wharf as that would not be nearly so useful as it might be. Moreover, while the finances of the colony are burdened as they are, and hampered by the absurd restrictions which weigh upon them, it is useless to talk about public works, and we must be content to see the development of the place "creeping on from point to point" by the help of private enterprise.

The house in College gardens occupied by Messrs. Birley & Co.'s Junior Mess, was burglariously entered during last night, but the timely barking of the dog and the clicking of a pistol had the effect of making the intruders vanish. The premises were evidently entered in case any thing in the yard was worth taking, but nothing, however, of importance was taken.

Piracy on a European Vessel.

For the first time since the Lebru was attacked, more than twelve months ago, a European vessel has been made the victim of China pirates. It is reported that the Ecsanoz, bound from here to Saigon, was attacked while becalmed near Hainan, about the 24th ultimo, by a pirate junk, captured and eventually scuttled. Some of the Europeans on board were killed, some escaped by swimming, and were picked up after being three days in the water. The particulars have been received via Macao, whither the persons who were saved eventually found their way. We have only received vague accounts of the disaster as yet, however, as none of the crew or officers are at present in the colony.

Police Intelligence, 17th June.

BEFORE E. W. GOODLAKE, Esq.

NOISES IN THE COURT.

The business of the day during a morning that the sitting magistrate has to call out for silence or quiet, is a sign of the irregular manner in which the approaches of the court are kept by the ushers. Bodies of women, witnesses, complainants, and loafers generally, are allowed to congregate outside the doors of the court, and there hold loud discussions upon the charges of the various prisoners, and other matters. This is doubly annoying to the magistrate, whose efforts to come at the truth of a difficult case are often frustrated by the witnesses purposely kept apart, being corrupted by the people hanging around the doors, who, were the duties of the ushers properly carried on, would be unable to stand in the proper place for the general public.

"STUCK AND "STRUCK."

Sergeant O'Brien, of the Water Police, J. Foley, of the Army and Navy Tavern, and J. Smith, an ex-innkeeper, were summoned by J. F. Burgess, of the Liverpool Arms, for an assault.

Mr. Hazland appeared on behalf of the complainant.

The complainant appeared with both eyes in mourning, and his nose damaged, while Sergeant O'Brien had an ugly cut on the head.

Mr. Burgess said that about half-past three o'clock on Monday, the defendants and himself, were playing Euchre in the Army and Navy. They were playing partners with Smith, and Sergeant O'Brien and the remaining prisoner were partners. The first game they were playing for drinks he got "stuck" for, and then the sergeant got "stuck" for one; after their luck changed "double or quits." This was all done very again, the end being that Sergeant O'Brien got "stuck" for a considerable number of drinks. He then was asked to "play off," and after a bit, he did. However, he saw the sergeant do a little bit of cheating, so he threw down the cards and said he would not play any more. The sergeant and himself then had a few words, which were ended by the sergeant "hauling off" and hitting him on the nose and body also struck him. After a bit Smith asked him to go out in the yard and wash his face and he did so, but in his absence the two defendants, Smith and Foley, held his arms, while O'Brien hit him three times in the face. Shortly after the other two defendants struck him, and then Foley called out that he "had had enough." He reported the case to the Inspector on duty.

William Alison, a seaman, said he was at the Army and Navy Tavern on Monday, about half past three o'clock. He saw the three defendants and Burgess playing Euchre for drinks. He heard them wrangling, and then saw Sergeant O'Brien hit Burgess twice in the face. He also saw Burgess hit O'Brien on the head. The defendants were not drunk, although they might have had a glass. He did not see either Smith or Foley strike the complainant.

Robert Burns also was at the parties in the case play Euchre for drinks at the Army and Navy. He heard them quarrel, and then jump up from the bench and go hold of each other. Foley ran between the parties, and tried to separate them. Sergeant O'Brien struck the first blow, on the nose, and Burgess returned it on the head. He did not see Smith hit the complainant.

Mr. Goodlake said he was inclined to believe that there had been an assault, and it was also his opinion that the two last defendants had not committed any assault. There was no evidence of the assault in the yard, so he would impose on Sergeant O'Brien $10, or seven days' imprisonment. Had there not been provocation, it would have been much more. The other defendants would be discharged.

Piracy on the High Seas.

The seven prisoners charged with the crime, were again brought up before Mr. May, to-day, at half-past ten o'clock.

Inspector Daly said he received information of the piracy on the 26th May, and in consequence the gunboat Cockatrice went out to search. At the same time he took measures himself by placing a police-boat at the entrance of the harbour. He boarded the junk No. 136 on the 28th instant, and found first, second and third prisoners on board, as well as the boy who had turned Queen's evidence. The first prisoner gave him his license, and on seeing that the name of junk No. 136 was given as Ayeshen, he called on the security to produce the rest of the crew, when the fourth, fifth, sixth and seven prisoners were given up. When he went on board the junk there were found about about three-quarters of a pound of gunpowder, and some bullets, also a long telescope. The inspector then described how he had disguised the prisoners as Chinamen, and allotted them to different places, and how the witnesses first examined, identified the first three prisoners.

Mr. Francis cross-examined the inspector at length, but without anything of importance being elicited.

The Chinese interpreter to the Harbourmaster was examined as to the time the junk No. 136 was entered, and, after an immense deal of badgering, said that the master of junk No. 136 entered on the 25th of May, and stated that he had arrived the day before, namely, the very day on which the piracy was committed.

Mr. Alachardo said that, according to the books, the junk arrived on the 25th ult., and left again on the 27th.

Mr. Francis addressed his Worship for the prisoners, saying that it was absurd to think that a junk intending to commit a piracy would be frightened away by a few bits of crockery-ware being thrown. Besides which there was nothing whatever against the prisoners in the evidence.

Mr. May in a few words said he would discharge the four last prisoners (the pilots), but the first three who had been identified by the three witnesses, he would commit for trial, but being allowed, first prisoner two securities $250 each, and the other two, half that amount.

A REAL UNION WITH IRELAND. The following petition has been presented to Parliament, signed by Mr. J. O'Neale Neale, of Brookhill, Devon, and of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Recorder of Walsall:—That in the summer of the year 1842 your petitioner was retained as counsel to the Postmen, Coleraine, and Armagh Railway, and deputed to visit the North of Ireland on behalf of that railway company: that in the course of his investigations your petitioner was struck by the feasibility of making a solid causeway from the Mull of Cantyre in Scotland to Tor Point, near Cape Fair, in Ireland, a distance of only eleven miles; that no unusual difficulties existed to prevent a set of one or more railways transmit across such causeway, the traffic over which would pay a fair percentage on the cost thereof, but the railway panic of 1845 rendered it impossible to proceed further in the matter: that your petitioner is convinced such a causeway with railways at uniting the three kingdoms would restore that fresh life and prosperity to Ireland which would greatly tend to heal all religious feuds and extinguish Fenianism, while to England it would impart additional strength, security, and honour. Your petitioner therefore entreats your honourable House to appoint a Select Committee of Inquiry to ascertain the practicability of making such causeway, and to report thereon to your honourable House."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Ministerial Explanation.

Full reports of the explanation which was given by Mr. Disraeli on the 4th of May in the House of Commons, are contained in the papers by the present mail. The account of what passed between Her Majesty and the Prime Minister, is as clear as words can make it. The whole speech is too long for these columns, but intelligible extracts may be made. Mr. Disraeli said:—

Sir, I am most anxious on this occasion to use no expression which can for a moment be considered in the slightest degree coloured; and I would speak, if I could, on an occasion so critical as the present, with the judicial accuracy of the Bench. But I think I may say, speaking in the hearing, I hope, of fair, but I know of vigilant critics, that during the period we have so held office the conduct of our administration in no important branch was ever impugned. (Cheers.) I think I may even go further. Not only was the conduct of no important branch of our administration ever impugned during that period, but our administration in every branch was supported by this House, and commanded even by our opponents. (Hear.) I will take notably the administration of Ireland, that being the country the proposed legislation respecting which has brought about the present political crisis. It is on record that the leader of the Opposition, Lord Russell, has on more than one occasion, and in the most marked manner, expressed his entire approbation of the administration of Ireland under Lord Abercorn. He has congratulated Lord Derby on possessing such a colleague, and he has publicly in Ireland announced that under the Vice-royalty of Lord Abercorn the Irish enjoyed the impartial administration of justice (Cheers.) It will be remembered that the administration of Ireland has been conducted under the most difficult and trying circumstances; and, speaking in the presence of many Irish members, of great ability, of long experience in Parliamentary matters, and of extreme vigilance as to the conduct of Ministers, I appeal to their recollection whether, during the whole period of our administration of the conduct of the Government in Ireland has not always been spoken of with respect and sympathy by hon. members opposite. (Hear, hear.)

After referring their to the administration of foreign affairs, and our relations with America, he went on:—

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this state of affairs a new question arose in the House of Commons. It arose suddenly at a few days' notice. (Cheers.) It arose on a question which, in my humble opinion, right hon. gentlemen, I am only stating facts. I do not wish to have any controversy on a statement of this kind, but I am recalling the recollection of this House when I say that the notice the House was asked to consider a proposition of a startling character, which was, in fact, no less than the disestablishment of the Church in one of the integral portions of the empire. It so happened, as the House is aware, that on the motion of the leader of the Opposition, Lord Russell, there had been a commission issued by the present Government to inquire into the condition of that Church. It was also well known that the Commission had been intrusted to very able men, and that they were pursuing their labours with considerable energy and determination. It was even known that there was more than a prospect of their reporting the result of their inquiry to Parliament at the first possible moment. Therefore, considering the peculiar duties which devolved upon the Government—namely, of passing the supplementary Reform Bills, I don't say but her Majesty received the shocking intelligence with the courage and calmness which become her character and race. He concluded by moving an address expressing the sorrow and indignation of the Upper Chamber at the act, its regret and sympathy with her Majesty, its congratulations upon the escape of the Prince, and its hopes for his speedy recovery. The same earnest expression of loyalty and sympathy was formally made in the Commons by Mr. Disraeli.

The Treason-Felony Trials.

The 28th April was appointed for the trial of the prisoners Richard Burke, alias George Berry, alias Edmund C. Winsley, alias Wallace, thirty-five, of no occupation; Joseph Mallon, alias Casey, twenty-three, clerk, and Harry Mullaly, alias Shaw, twenty-six, carpenter "for feloniously and treasherously conspiring together, with divers other persons, to deprive our Sovereign Lady the Queen of the style and Royal name of the Imperial Crown of Great Britain and Ireland." The greatest curiosity was manifested by the public to hear the proceedings. The presiding judges, Mr. Baron Bramwell and Mr. Justice Keating, took their seats on the bench at ten o'clock, and the prisoners were then placed at the bar and called upon to plead. Burke and Shaw pleaded not guilty, and Casey also pleaded not guilty, adding, "I am a loyal man." The counsel for the Crown were the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Giffard, Q.C., Mr. Poland, and Mr. Archibald. The counsel for the prisoners were Mr. Ernest Jones and Mr. Hind Dorand for Burke, Mr. Pater for Mullady, and Mr. S. H. Lewis for Casey.

As in a previous case, most of the evidence had already been made public. There was no opinion, much sooner than was anticipated. (Renewed cheers.) The consequences of the application of that principle to England would be very serious. If the union between Church and State is abolished, the Church must either become an imperium in imperio, and so become perhaps more powerful than the State, and weaken the action of Government, or it must break into endless sects and schisms, which would finally be absorbed by the insidious and disciplined power of the Church of Rome. (Much laughter and some cheers.) Equally, in other alternative, the Royal supremacy must be destroyed. The Royal supremacy has hitherto been looked upon as the corner stone of the Constitution. It is universally admitted to be the only security for religious liberty, and, in our opinion, it is one of the main guarantees for our civil rights. (Hear, hear.) Those were the reasons why the Government opposed the proposition of the right hon. gentleman. The House, however, by a decided majority, decided in favour of the policy of the right hon. gentleman, and we had then to consider whether the vote of the House in that respect militated against the principles we maintain, and shifted the case to different places, and how the witnesses first examined, identified the first three prisoners.

Mr. Francis cross-examined the inspector at length, but without anything of importance being elicited.

The Chinese interpreter to the Harbour-master was examined as to the time the junk No. 136 was entered, and, after an immense deal of badgering, said that the master of junk No. 136 entered on the 25th of May, and stated that he had arrived the day before, namely, the very day on which the piracy was committed.

Mr. Alachardo said that, according to the books, the junk arrived on the 25th ult., and left again on the 27th.

Mr. Francis addressed his Worship for the prisoners, saying that it was absurd to think that a junk intending to commit a piracy would be frightened away by a few bits of crockery-ware being thrown. Besides which there was nothing whatever against the prisoners in the evidence.

Mr. May in a few words said he would discharge the four last prisoners (the pilots), but the first three who had been identified by the three witnesses, he would commit for trial, but being allowed, first prisoner two securities $250 each, and the other two, half that amount.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

From every quarter of the reading globe there comes the same querulous exclamation, that nothing so much resembles the last new novel as the last but one, and that the public, utterly weary, but still laborious with paper-cutter in hand, is quite prepared to find the next forthcoming three volumes mean an old-disguised rechauffé of their predecessors. A very distinguished author of romance frankly told his readers only the other day, at the very outset of a novel, that he really had nothing fresh for them; but that, as they were good enough to extend their favour to him, he would do his utmost to please them by dishing up once more the familiar materials. Has it really come to this? Is novel-writing reduced to mere skill in cooking, and dressing, and garnishing, and will neither the cereal nor the open yield any new species of game? Is ingenuity worn out, or has everybody got his own little bit of it, and nobody any more? Mr. Mill, following in the wake of Baron Bunsen, assured us some years ago that we were all getting uncommonly —or, perhaps we ought to say, commonly—alike; and if poor human nature is to succumb to such a fate, why should the reflections in the mirror held up to it fare any better?

But is it true? Do we ever by any chance open a really bright, fresh original novel, something new and remarkable than the description by General Thomas of the fusions attempt on the War Office, which was made on the night of Feb. After obtaining admission he told the Secretary of War, whom he found sitting among some members of Congress, that he came to demand the office. Mr. Stanton not quite sure if he had understood him to his pose as adjutant-general. He refused to obey, and was told that he could stand there as long as he pleased. But the storm was then at its height, May, 1868. Somewhat in the presence of the members of Congress vanished when the two were alone together. "I left the room," says General Thomas, "and went to the office of General Schriver. Mr. Stanton followed me in there; he asked me pretty much the same question as before—whether I insisted on acting as Secretary of War, and whether I intended to hold the office. I gave the direct answer, and then there was some little chat between the Secretary of War and myself." A little pleasantry followed, about Thomas having had nothing to eat and drink, and then followed this most remarkable and engaging scene between the rivals:—"He put his arm around my neck as he used to do, in a familiar manner, and ran his hand through my hair, and I turned round to General Schriver, and said, 'Schriver, suppose I do battle away? Bring it out.' (Roars of laughter.) Schriver unlocked his desk and took out a small vial; the Secretary then proposed we should have a spoonful of whisky. I said I would take a little. General Schriver poured it out into a tumbler, and divided it equally. He took the glasses up in this way (indicating) and measured them with his eyes; gave a passenger first to me with a full bottle of whisky, and he and I took a drink together."

Prince Louis of Hesse,—Some sensation has been produced in Northern Germany by Prince Louis of Hesse's resignation of the command he held in the Hessian army. This event is said to have been caused by the influence of the anti-Prussian party at the Hessian Court. The Prince, whose liberal opinions have made him a great favourite with the Hessian people, has since the events of 1866 vehemently deprecated the entrance of the whole of the grand duchy into the North German Band. The Grand Duke, on the other hand, still leans towards Austria, and has intermarried his son, Heir-on Dalwigk, does his utmost to resist the tendency of his people to unite with their fellow Germans. In this, however, he is opposed by the principal members of his family. Prince Charles, his brother, and the heir presumptive, is married to a Prussian Princess, and is a strong adherent of the Prussian alliance. This is even still more the case with Prince Alexander, the eldest son of the Grand Duke, who has passed the greater part of their military career in the Prussian army. Of these, Prince Henry is so strongly attached to Prussia that he remained in the service even during the campaign of 1866, though positively forbidden to do so by the Grand Duke. The other son, Prince Louis, married a Princess of Battenberg, is a Major-General in the Prussian army, and the command in the army of Hesse, which he has just resigned, was held by him in virtue of that rank.

Consolidated Fund. Upon that fund also is charged the Lord Lieutenant's £20,000, and these Estimates contain only votes of £6,176 for the household, and £32,927 for the Chief Secretary's office; this last item including, by a novel arrangement, the charges of inspection of prisons and lunatic asylums. Then there are votes of £979,230 for Irish constabulary and Dublin police; £117,389 for law courts, the judicial salaries being paid out of the Consolidated Fund; £185,618 for criminal prosecutions and prisons; £143,256 will be voted for public buildings in Ireland, £49,916 for public works of various kinds and public commissions, £21,722 for the registrar-office of births, &c., £95,267 for the administration of the Poor Law, £26,019 for hospitals and charities, £35,889 for superannuations, and £39,526 for a miscellaneous number of purposes, registration of deeds, public record-office, &c. A considerable proportion of the £9,000,000 to be voted this Session for civil services is for purposes in which all parts of the United Kingdom have a common interest; after allowing for these, more than £2,000,000 are, as above shown, to be expended in Ireland, more peculiarly for Irish advantage. But whatever does Ireland good does good to the United Kingdom.

AN INCIDENT OF THE AMERICAN IMPEACHMENT.—In the course of the trial there have been many amusing episodes, but none more remarkable than the description by General Thomas of the famous attempt on the War Office, which was made on the 22nd of Feb. After obtaining admission he told the Secretary of War, whom he found sitting among some members of Congress, that he came to demand the office. Mr. Stanton refused to give it, and ordered him to his room as adjutant-general. He refused to obey, and was told that he could stand there as long as he pleased. But the sternness which the Minister affected towards the pretender in the presence of the members of Congress vanished when the two were alone together. "I left the room," says General Thomas, "and went to the office of General Schriver: Mr. Stanton followed me in there; he asked me pretty much the same question as before—whether I insisted on taking possession of the War, and whether I obeyed the order. I gave the direct answer, and then there was some little chat between the Secretary of War and myself." A little pleasantry followed about Thomas having had nothing to eat or drink, and then followed this most remarkable and engaging scene between the rivals:—"He put his arm around my neck as he used to do, in a familiar manner, and ran his hand through my hair, and I turned round to General Schriver and said, 'Schriver, have you got a bottle here? Bring it out.' (Roars of laughter.) Schriver unlocked his door and took out a small vial; the Secretary then proposed we should have a spoonful of whisky. I said I would take a little. General Schriver poured it out into a tumbler, and divided it equally. He took the glass up in this way (indicating) and measured them with his eye; presently a messenger came in, with a full bottle of whisky, and he and I took a drink together."

PRINCE LOUIS OF HESSE.—Some sensation has been produced in Northern Germany by Prince Louis of Hesse's resignation of the command he held in the Hessian army. This event is said to have been caused by the intrigues of the anti-Prussian party at the Hessian Court. The Prince, whose liberal opinions have made him a great favourite with the Hessian people, has since the events of 1866 warmly advocated the entrance of the whole of the grand duchy into the North German Bund. The Grand Duke, on the other hand, still leans towards Austria, and together with his minister, Herr von Dalwigk, does his utmost to resist the tendency of his people to unite with their fellow Germans. In this, however, he is opposed by the principal members of his family. Prince Charles, his brother, and the heir presumptive, is married to a Prussian Princess, and is a strong adherent of the Prussian alliance. This is even still more the case with his two sons, both of whom have passed the greater part of their military career in the Prussian army. Of these, Prince Henry is so strongly attached to Prussia that he remained in her service even during the campaign of 1866, though positively forbidden to do so by the Grand Duke. The other son, Prince Louis (husband of our Princess Alice), is a Major-General in the Prussian army, and the lieutenant in the army of H.ss, which he has just resigned, was held by him in virtue of that rank.

TIDMAN'S GENUINE SEA SALT, FOR MAKING SEA WATER BATHS IN YOUR OWN ROOM.

MR. CLASSE begs to call the special attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to the credit derived from this SEA SALT, which is manufactured from the FOAMING BILLOWS.

By dissolving a small portion in water, it produces a BATH exactly similar to SEA WATER, and the same invigorating and healthy results will be derived from its use as by an actual dip in the sea.

Extracts.

The Ministry.

(From the "Times.")

The crowd of members who assembled in the House of Commons early yesterday afternoon testified by their presence their anxiety to learn what had been the decision of the Ministry. Would they resign, or could there by any possibility be a Dissolution? A glance at the faces of the listening members as Mr. Disraeli spoke showed how keenly they weighed every word which fell from his lips, and left no doubt as to the actual truth of the epithet "penal" which Mr. Gladstone subsequently declared was a constitutional and recognized description of an untimely Dissolution. Mr. Disraeli most cruelly, as the majority of his hearers thought, kept the House for a long time in suspense. He began by referring, with the studied impartiality of the judicial Bench, to the excellent administrative qualities of his colleagues; he next proceeded to develope a view of the constitutional function of Dissolutions, more ingenious, perhaps, than accurate; and it was not until after a second digression on the moderation of Lord Derby in not advising a Dissolution when he entered upon office, or again last year, that he came to the points on which his audience were longing to hear him. It may, indeed, be doubted whether even then some of those present gathered more than a confused sense of consolation that there would be no Dissolution before the end of the autumn, if, indeed, before that month of January which has been so long fixed as the term of many a Parliamentary career.

Mr. Disraeli's description of his visit to Osborne was expressed in language so carefully chosen that it is dangerous to condense it. The advice which, as First Minister of the Crown, he tendered to Her Majesty was substantially such as we stated yesterday. He informed the Queen of the adverse votes of the House on Mr. Gladstone's Resolutions affecting the Irish Church. He placed before Her Majesty the state of parties and of the country, and it may be presumed that he anticipated the declaration he made last night in the House of Commons—that "it is with the profound conviction of the Ministry that the opinion of the nation on the subject of the Irish Establishment did not agree with the vote of the House of Commons." Having made these communications, he submitted to Her Majesty the advice of her Ministers that she would be graciously pleased to dissolve Parliament, and take the opinion of the country on the conduct of the Ministry and the question of the Irish Church. So far there was nothing to which any just critic can object. It may be believed—we believe—that the country, instead of censuring, will warmly approve the action of the House of Commons in declaring that the Irish Church must be dis-established and disendowed. The country will simply refer back the votes of the House of Commons with fuller emphasis. But, when the First Minister of the Crown, speaking for himself and his colleagues, affirms their "profound conviction" to be to the contrary, their word must be taken. The Queen is constitutionally bound to act upon it. It is to no purpose to ask, with Mr. Gladstone, whether an appeal to the country after a majority as large as 65 has ever been known in our Parliamentary annals. The Crown cannot regard—

"Of nicely calculated less or more."

But Mr. Disraeli's communication to Her Majesty did stop with the advice to dissolve. He submitted that if the Queen thought the settlement of the question at issue or the interest of the country would be better served by the retirement of her Ministers they were prepared to resign. In fact, Mr. Disraeli tendered his resignation. It cannot be concealed that by this method of presenting the state of affairs to Her Majesty Mr. Disraeli shifted the responsibility of choice from the Minister to the Sovereign, and in form contravened a great Constitutional principle. Mr. Ayrton in the subsequent discussion last night said as much, though he managed to detract from the merit of his discovery by his awkward comment upon it. To suggest that the House might be swayed by an apprehension that it was pursuing a course contrary to the views of Her Majesty herself was to detract from the freedom of discussion Mr. Ayrton meant to magnify. Her Majesty acted in the crisis as a Constitutional Sovereign. She commanded Mr. Disraeli's presence at a second audience, and then communicated her answer. By declining to accept the alternative resignation of the Ministry, and professing her readiness to dissolve Parliament at such time as the state of public business went permit the Queen threw back upon her Ministers the responsibility of the course they advised her to pursue. Upon this Mr. Disraeli resumed his proper position as the Constitutional adviser of the Crown. He represented to Her Majesty that the present constituencies were, at least, as well qualified as their representatives to express an opinion on the Irish Establishment, but her Ministers thought every effort should be made so that the appeal to the country should be directed to the new voters, and they believed, with the co-operation of Parliament, the appeal might be made in the Autumn. What the Ministry were prepared to do to effect this object Mr. Disraeli made plain in the remainder of his speech. They would engage in no protracted debates, and take no formal divisions on Mr. Gladstone's second and third Resolutions. He looked upon them as the corollaries of the first, and was ready to give Mr. Gladstone the earliest public day at his command to bring them on. He could not, indeed, with any self-respect, consent to the suspension of the Standing Orders for the purpose of putting them in the front of last night's business, although he intimated that had the request to take the Resolutions last night been made before he left the House on Friday morning, he should have assented to it.

The Duke of Somerset, in the House of Lords yesterday evening, succinctly, if plaintively, expressed the relation of the Hereditary Chamber to the Lower House by declaring that their Lordships were waiting to know what the House of Commons thought of the present state of affairs. It is, indeed, true that for some little time the House of Commons did not itself know what it thought of the matter. Mr. Gladstone withdrew his motion to suspend the Standing Orders; but Mr. Bouverie was faithful to his reputation as a zealous guardian of sensational forms, and in the vehemence of his censures on the Ministry seemed to have forgotten how recently he denounced the Opposition as a "rabble." Brief are Parliamentary memories. Mr. Bright and Mr. Lowe supported each other in denouncing the affection of the Government for office, and Mr. Gladstone declined to bind himself in any solemn league and covenant with them. But the sense of the House favoured the arrangement proposed. The course to be pursued is without precedent, but the emergency is also, in itself unprecedented, and in such a case that plan deserves adoption which shows the best possible way out of the difficulty. Mr. Gladstone's Resolutions will run their course, and if his Supposary Act ever reaches the House of Lords its further progress will probably be stopped by the Veto of the "walking" Chamber. In the meantime, there is no reason to apprehend that additional loss of a year which Mr. Bright dreads, inasmuch as Mr. Gladstone and his immediate associates can in the comparative freedom of Opposition prepare their final Bill, so as to have it ready when they succeed to office. The truth is, however, that a rejection of the Government scheme would actually cause the loss of the year, a delay which would, according to Mr. Bright, make Irishmen doubt the sincerity of Liberal professions. The Dissolution hangs over the House of Commons. Mr. Disraeli, as the spokesman of the Ministry, has declared their solemn conviction that the country views the Resolutions of the House of Commons with disfavour, and Her Majesty has acceded to the recommendation that a Dissolution be granted. It follows that if the House refuses to proceed with the measures preliminary to the Dissolution in which an appeal can be made to the Reformed constituencies, an appeal will be made to the unreformed constituencies. This is the choice before the House. The issue of an appeal to the unreformed constituencies would be the election of a Parliament whose first duty would be to upset the Ministry from office, the next to pass the Scotch and Irish Reform Bills, the third to submit to another Dissolution, before the definite scheme for the dis-establishment and dis-endowment of the Irish Church could be approved by the representatives of the Reformed Constituencies of the United Kingdom. These considerations are sufficient to approve the wisdom of completing the work of Reform at once. There can be no doubt that it can be done so that an election might be held soon after Michaelmas. A special registration was an incident of the Reform Bill of 1832, and though Sir Robert Collier appeared to be anxious about the appeals from the Revising Barristers, few will share his anxiety. If the crisis be weighed, as it must be by the majority of the House, dispassionately, and apart from the mutual heat of competitors for office, the advantages of a rapid settlement of Reform, a speedy appeal to the reformed constituencies of the Kingdom, and a speedy introduction into Parliament of a measure definitely and finally abolishing the Irish Establishment must outweigh the advantages of ejecting the Ministry after an immediate Dissolution, purchased as it must be by a real postponement of the great object desired.
